I RECEIVED your letter in regards to the TV ratings, I personally have no problems with them. But I think your wasting your time & money putting V-chips & ratings on everything when no one has any use for them except for parents who controll what their kids watch with them shouldn't need the ratings for anyway.

I hope this letter is considered. You should take the money your spending on this & put it to better use like for getting the medical problems taken care of, (such as AIDS or Cancer). Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,
Peter Wise

Dear Sir or Madam,

I'm writing this letter in regards to the recent t.v. ratings. I think that they should allow shows to have more action in shows that are rated t.v. 14 or t.v. M. I can understand that you don't want little kids to be viewing inappropriate television shows, but to fix that problem, you should encourage parents to tell the children to leave the room.

In conclusion I think that if the ratings stay, the shows should have more action/violence for shows like t.v. 14, and less for shows like tv 47. Thankyou.

Sincerely,

Chris Lockard

Dear Sir or Madam,

I am writing to you about the new TV ratings on TV. I think it is mostly a waste of time to rate TV shows. Of course, when parents see what the kids are watching, they are going to tell them to watch it or not. The ratings aren't going to make up the parents mind whether to let them watch the show or not. Also, when kids get home from school, they can watch what they want when there parents aren't home.

Another reason that the TV ratings aren't making a big difference is because I know someone who is in 5th grade and they can't watch shows that are rated Y7 because men on the show go out on dates. Or perhaps the kids don't pay respect to the elders on the show. My point is that the parents probably don't even know that it is rated Y7 and the girl watching the show is 11 years old.

The only good reason that the reason that the ratings can effect homes is for parents that want to have easy guidelines. But, it isn't making the difference that parents previewing shows would.

I thank you for your time and hope you think about some of my considerations.

Sincerely

David Emery
